

Business Must Act

Dear JoS. A. Bank Manager,

Americans are grappling with the consequences of gun violence every day, yet the federal government has failed to pass legislation that would keep us safe. That's why large American employers have a responsibility to their workers, customers, and communities to do everything they can to keep us safe from the estimated 393 million firearms in civilian hands.

Over 40,000 Americans lose their lives to guns every single year, including 12,000 people who are murdered with firearms -- most of them young Black and Latino men. Women, who represent the primary shoppers of American households, are also disproportionately impacted by gun violence. Five hundred and fifty-four American women are shot and killed by their intimate partners every single year, on average—a death every sixteen hours.

That is why we were so disappointed to learn that JoS. A. Bank scored an F on the Gun Safety Scorecard in part because you do not fully prohibit firearms in your stores and have yet to publicly call for Congress to pass gun reform. To learn more about the grade visit BusinessMustAct.org

That is why we are urging you to change course and lead in helping build safer communities for us all. We're calling on you to prohibit guns in all of your stores, invest in community-based violence intervention programs that are reducing rates of every-day gun violence, and consider ending political donations to politicians who stand in the way of gun reform.

American businesses know that gun violence can also impact business. Research has found that surges in gun violence reduce the growth rate of new retail and service businesses and gun violence broadly imposes $229 billion in total annual costs on the United States – approximately 1.4 percent of GDP.

Since 72 percent of the public feels more favorably towards companies with CEOs that actively support gun safety laws, we are calling on you to act.

Sincerely, _____
